KCGM commits to Consider, Communicate & Contribute!

19 Dec 2002

Kalgoorlie Consolidated Gold Mines today launched a new Community Relations Policy which encourages all its employees to “Consider. Communicate and Contribute” to the Kalgoorlie-Boulder Community.

The new policy was launched at the city’s number one tourist attraction, the Super Pit Lookout, by Chair of the KCGM Community Reference Group, Ron Yuryevich. The BBQ celebration was attended by KCGM employees and community members and special guests Kim Hughes and Ken Judge.

KCGM General Manager John Shipp was pleased to announce the renewed policy was very much a living document that would be communicated widely to employees and the community.

“We have really taken a long hard look at what it means to be a part of the Kalgoorlie-Boulder community, and we came up with three very simple concepts which reflect the entire, simply written, policy.”

The three catchwords are:

- Consider, how your work will affect the community and also consider buying local;
- Communicate openly with the community and through the use of the Public Inquiry Line; and
- Contribute through local sponsorships and participation.

“I’m please to say that rather being a piece of paper on the wall of our office – these three simple concepts in our policy will be promote around the site on specially designed billboards,” said Mr Shipp.

“Best of all we used 12 real KCGM families as models – and you’d have to admit they really look terrific!”
